Catalog Course Description

An introductory course in motion picture history covering the years 1895-1945. The historically significant technical and thematic developments of world cinema are analyzed in detail in the context of production systems. 54 lecture hours.

Course Objectives

- Demonstrate an appreciation for the development of the motion picture as an art form both historically and technically.
- Explain the sociological links of a "mass" art form; how film reflects the society in which it is produced, both on purpose (as propaganda) and more subtly, such as horror, German expressionism, etc.)
- Demonstrate skills of critical analysis in examining technical and thematic problems of film history such as the development of storytelling, genre development and filmmaker's signature styles.
- Explain the way the film making industry developed around the world as a business, an art form and a tool of persuasion.
